Warm greetings to our readers, academics, and practitioners of citizenship/civic education.

This April 2026 issue arrives at a crucial juncture, where the definition of a ‘citizen’ is no longer confined to physical territorial boundaries but has expanded into the boundless digital realm. As artificial intelligence (AI) technology becomes increasingly integrated into public life, new challenges arise: how can the values of citizenship, ethics, and social responsibility serve as a guiding compass amid a fragmented flow of information?

In this edition, Jurnal Civics: Media Kajian Kewarganegaraan presents a series of articles that explore these dynamics through various perspectives. Our primary focus in this edition is on digital citizenship

We recognise that the study of citizenship is dynamic. Therefore, the articles in this edition not only offer empirical findings but also new theoretical frameworks intended to spark further dialogue. CIVICS Journal remains committed to serving as an intellectual platform that bridges visionary thinking with practical implementation on the ground.

We extend our deepest gratitude to our peer reviewers, who have worked tirelessly to uphold the scientific quality of the manuscripts, and to the authors who have entrusted their finest works to us.

Enjoy reading. May the ideas presented in this issue make a tangible contribution to strengthening Indonesia’s national identity and fostering a healthier democracy.
